

ADAPTERS FOR MAMIYA RB-67 and RZ-67

Better Light has introduced two adapters that allow photographers using Mamiya's RB67 and RZ67 medium format cameras to convert their equipment into high-end digital scanning cameras. The adapters can be used with any of the Better Light digital scanning backs.

Better Light digital scanning backs have been the high resolution digital solution of choice for commercial and advertising studios doing product photography, flat art copy and other still life work. The scan backs are used with continuous light sources and are not recommended for people photography.

Machined to exactly the same focal plane as a conventional Mamiya film back, the Better Light RB/RZ67 adapters require no modifications to the camera or scan back for proper installation. The same lenses used for conventional film shooting are used with the RB67 and RZ67 adapters, without any impact on focal length or perspective.

To focus, the photographer can use either the standard Mamiya ground glass or Mamiya 45° prism view finder. After focusing through the viewfinder, the photographer locks up the mirror and opens the camera lens with the bulb setting. Better Light's ViewFinder™ software package, provided with each scanning back, also features digital focus verification for the ultimate in focusing precision.

With the adapter installed, each of the Better Light digital scanning backs captures the Mamiya's maximum image area, providing an overall digital image that is approximately 7 cm (2-3/4 in.) square with slightly rounded corners, producing digital files equal to 76% of the file capacity of the Better Light scan back's full capability. A horizontal or vertical image can also be recorded by means of the cropping tools in the Better Light ViewFinder™ capture software.
